in Tenement Property Likely Soon Be Supplemented by Trading of a More Substantial Kind-United states Express Company Buys Again.

The reduction in volume of trading which maily follows a holiday was only slightly in vesterday's brokerage reports. Most of the business was of the conventional sort and affected flats and tenements. ne transaction out of the ordinary was the purchase of additional land on Greenwich street by the United States Express

Two or three days will probably elapse fore the market resumes the unusual activity interrupted by the Labor Day But from now on brokers will he watching for the first signs of an expending market.

Not that there is any fault to be found with the current market. For several reeks past practically all tenement neighshoods have witnessed great activity. deed, the season has opened so much advance of the usual time and has deeloped so great a volume of business as to are no doubt that the speculative element is alive to the shortage in housing accomdations. This sort of trading, and with in increasing proportion of investment archasing, will continue. It will be fosered in more ways than one by the return of ousands this week from the enjoyment of cation pastimes to the serious business fliving in New York city.

But it is also true that the housing situan has so far overshadowed other conderations that a less restricted market ill be welcomed. High priced real estate, reepting in one or two sections where he making public of definite plans enouraged speculation, has been little in for several months. It was not aspicuously dealt in last spring. In the conspicuously dealt in last spring. In the meantime population has been growing. Business has been expanding. Indirectly this growth must be reflected in larger demand for real estate to supply this larger business, commercial and financial needs. Unless all signs fail, therefore, this demand should soon be reflected in a market of much wider range than that shown by current dealing in tenement neighborhoods.
